VALUATION HEARING

Protest against attorneys for the Potomac Electric Power Company "putting words in the mouth of the witness' was made by Conrad H. Syme, general counsel for the Public Utility Commission at the hearing by the commission today on the valuation of the company's properties.

Mr. Syme said the attorneys had on several occasions in their cross-examination of Andrew Sangster, chief accountant of the valuation bureau attempted to "put words in the mouth of the witness, a procedure which no court would countenance for a moment."

Answer was made by John S. Barbour, counsel for the company, that when statements were offered by a witness in contradiction of testimony given previously it was necessary to 'put words into his mouth" in order to arrive at a clear understanding of his meaning.

his meaning.

The colloquy was ended by the admonition of Colonel Kutz, chairman of the commission, to confine cross-examination to direct questioning. The testimony of Mr. Sangater regarding depreciation accounts and his reasons for eliminating certain items of cost in connection therewith occupied the morning session.

W. F. Ham, vice president, and S. R. Bowen, secretary, joined in cross-examination of the witness.

Charles L. Pilisbury, chief engineer of the Valuation Bureau, probably will be called to the stand at the conclusion of Mr. Sangster's testimony, which is expected to occupy the remainder of the week.
